MARY PHAGAN PASSES JUDGMENT

The following poem from The New Republic is by Mary White Ovington and is an indictment fiercer than any we have read on the lynching of Frank, who was convicted of the poor girl's murder:

You care a lot about me, you men of Georgia, now that I am dead.
You have spent thousands of dollars trying to learn who mutilated my body.
You have filled the columns of your newspapers with the story of my wrong.
You have broken into a prison and murdered a man that I might be avenged.
But why did you not care for me when I was alive?

I was but a child, but you shut me out of the daylight.

You held me within four walls watching a machine that crashed through the air, Endlessly watching a knife as it cut a piece of wood.

Noise fills the place—noise, dust, and the smell of oil.

I wish some of the thousands of dollars that you spent on the trial might have kept me in school,

A real school, the kind you build for the rich.

I worked through the hot August days

When you were bossing the girls, or shooting
birds,

Or lounging in doorways cursing the nigger;
And you never paid me enough to buy a pretty dress.

You sometimes spoke coarsely to me when I went to and from my work;

Yes, you did, and I had to pretend I liked it.

Why did you despise me living and yet love me
so now?

I think I know. It is like what the preacher told me about Christ:

People hated Him when He was alive,

But when He was dead they killed man after man for His sake.

THE FREEDOM OF SEPARATION

By Rabindranath Tagore

You took me by the hand and drew me to your side,

Made me sit on the high seat before all men.

Till I became timid, unable to stir, and walk my own way,

Doubting and debating at each step

Lest I should tread on the smallest thorn of your disfavor.

I am freed at last!

The blow has come, the drum of insult sounded,
My seat laid low in the dust.

The road is open before me.

The call of the sky has reached my wings.

I go to join the ranks of the shooting stars of midnight,

To plunge into the profound obscure.

I am like the storm-driven cloud of summer

That cast off its crown of the sunset gold

And hung the jewel of thunder on its lightning chain.

In desperate joy I rush on along the dusty path
of the despised

Towards the final honor of your acceptance.

The child finds its mother when it leaves her womb.

When I am parted from you, thrown out of your envelopment,

I am free to see your face.

A Year Of Prohibition

Still finds the Russian armies hopelessly outclassed by their beer-drinking opponents on the west. Germany wisely encourages the use of a mild lager beer, such as

Fisher Beer

and results show that her course is the right one. The efficient men in war or peace are not excessive users of spirits, nor compulsory abstainers, either. Most of the big things in the world are done by truly temperate men, who drink mild beverages,
such as beer, in moderation.
